April 26, 2011
Iris Fischer Memorial Lectureship

John H. Glick, MD
President and Director, Abramson Family Cancer Research Institute; Madlyn & Leonard Abramson Professor of Clinical Oncology, University of Pennsylvania

Systemic Therapy for Early Stage Breast Cancer

Needs: The therapy options for patients with early stage breast cancer are evolving. It is important that clinicians understand the options available for adjuvant treatment in the early stage breast cancer patient.

Objectives: To define adjuvant therapy for targeted groups of early stage breast cancer; to learn about the recent conclusions from the St. Gallen Breast Cancer Conference; and to determine which groups of early stage breast cancer require adjuvant endocrine therapy, adjuvant chemotherapy, or both.