Wait, Renovate, or Relocate? Controversy Surrounding Endoscopic and Surgical Approaches to Early Esophageal Cancer

Nicholas Shaheen, MD, MPH
Professor of Medicine and Epidemiology, Director, Center for Esophageal Diseases and Swallowing, University of North Carolina School of Medicine

Daniel Boffa, MD
Assistant Professor of Thoracic Surgery, Yale School of Medicine

Needs: Esophageal adenocarcinoma has risen in incidence 500% over the past 40 years in the United States. Early intervention in Barrett’s esophagus is associated with a diminished risk of cancer, and allows organ-sparing therapy.

Objectives: To explain the current trends in Barrett’s esophagus and adenocarcinoma; to delineate the options for screening for subjects with chronic heartburn symptoms; and to report the alternatives for care of subjects with precancerous changes of the esophagus.
